Married and relocated to Hyderabad at a tender age of 18, Madhukanta Bhatt focused on handling the house and bringing up her children. She had always wanted to take up sewing, but buying a machine was too expensive at that time. She saved up money from her household expenses, bought herself a machine. However, she was not able to afford formal training on sewing. She then learnt the art of sewing, cutting and designing her clothes through observation.

She wanted to reduce textile waste and the use of plastic from Earth. So, she sourced her fabric from tailors and started making cloth bags and other eco-friendly products that she distributed to people for free. So far, she has distributed 35,000 bags all across Hyderabad and wishes to continue making more items. At the age of 93, she doesn't want to retire. 14-year-old Vinisha, from a town in South India, was concerned about the charcoal burnt while ironing clothes in the ironing shops.

It is estimated that there may be around 10 million ironing carts in India and each burn about 5 kg of charcoal every day. That is about 5 crore kg of charcoal burnt every day causing pollution in the environment. After doing in-depth research, Vinisha who is studying in class 9, came up with a solution to this problem – a design for a mobile ironing cart affixed with solar panels that connected to a 100Ah battery. All it takes is 5 hours of bright sunshine to fully charge the battery, which will power the steam iron box for six hours!

Vinisha's novel idea has won her this year's prestigious Children's Climate Prize, awarded by the Swedish organisation Children's Climate Foundation, which carries a prize money of Rs.8.64 lakhs.

In 2019, Maria decided to sell coconut-shell based products as she noticed that coconut shells were being thrown away even though they could be used for other purposes. Earlier they were used as utensils but now they don't find much value in our houses.

Initially, she did not want to put in a large investment in purchasing machinery. This is when her father stepped in to help. Being a retired mechanical engineer, he made a low-cost version of the machine while Maria spent this time reaching out to businesses who were willing to buy bowls made of coconut shells from her. After identifying a few businesses, Maria made a few bowls and printed business logos on them. When the orders were delivered, she received positive feedback. Once Maria started receiving more orders, she struggled to make them by herself. So, she reached out to artisans and explained about the products. With their help, Maria was able to take on more orders and expand the range of available products.

Turning coconut-shells to kitchenware

In 2019, Maria decided to sell coconut-shell based products as she noticed that coconut shells were being thrown away even though they could be used for other purposes.

Initially, she did not want to put in a large investment in purchasing machinery. This is when her father stepped in to help and made a low-cost version of the machine while Maria spent this time reaching out to businesses who were willing to buy bowls made of coconut shells. Then Maria made a few bowls and printed business logos on them. When the orders were delivered, she received positive feedback. Once Maria started receiving more orders, she struggled to make them by herself so she reached out to artisans and explained about the products. With their help, Maria was able to take on more orders and expand the range of available products.

Turning coconut-shells to kitchenware

In 2019, Maria decided to sell coconut-shell based products as she noticed that coconut shells were being thrown away even though they could be used for other purposes. Earlier they were used as utensils but now they don't find much value in our houses.

Initially, she did not want to put in a large investment in purchasing machinery. This is when her father stepped in to help. Being a retired mechanical engineer, he made a low-cost version of the machine while Maria spent this time reaching out to businesses who were willing to buy bowls made of coconut shells from her. After identifying a few businesses, Maria made a few bowls and printed business logos on them. When the orders were delivered, she received positive feedback. Once Maria started receiving more orders, she struggled to make them by herself. So, she reached out to artisans and explained about the products. With their help, Maria was able to take on more orders and expand the range of available products.

Source: www.betterindia.com ; 15th June 2021
